LACTATED FOOD
150 Meals for $1.00

It saved my Child's Life.
"When my child was born, the doctor ordered one of the other Foods. She said that unless she nearly died. I had three doctors, who said the trouble was Indigestion, and ordered the food changed to Lactated Food. It saved my child's life, and I owe you many thanks for it. I regard your Food as invaluable, and superior to all other artificial food for babies."
Miss A. J. Thompson,
Boston, Mass.
15 Indiana Place.

It Has No Equal.
"We are using in our nursery (containing forty infants) your Lactated Food, and it is far superior to all other food which has been used during the past ten years that I have been visiting physician. The Sisters of Charity, who have charge of the institution, say it has no equal."
W. E. DE COURCY, M.D.,

President Arthur's Escape.

It was through the window of James's house in Washington that a bullet intended for the Chesterfieldian successor of Garfield sped vainly on its way. You never heard of such a thing? I don't wonder at that, because the secret has never been disclosed before.

Arthur died in ignorance of it. I received permission the other night to tell the tale, as no reason now exists why it should be buried in silence. One night, a few days after Guiteau had felled Garfield to the ground and the President's life was still hanging in the balance, the then city editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, who was in Washington, became impressed with the importance of having an interview with Vice-President Arthur, who was at that time domiciled in the house of John P. Jones.

He got into a coupe and hastened to the bonanza king's residence, reaching there about midnight. He was met by Senator Jones, who told him that the Vice-President was in his bed and he would not like to disturb him at that hour, as Mr. Arthur had gained little rest since the assassination of the President. He invited the newspaper man, however, to his library and a smoke, and the two sat down in a bay window fronting upon the street and quietly chatted about the singular events which were at that time testing the endurance of republican institutions in this country. The air was warm and the casements were raised. The waiting carriage was drawn up in the shadow of a tree on the opposite side of the highway. The driver slept. Nothing disturbed the quiet of the scene except the occasional stamping of the restless horses. The room was lighted only and intermittently by the glow of the cigars behind which the two men talked in subdued tones. Suddenly there was a flash of light in front of the window, a sharp report, and a bullet whistled between the Senator and the scribe and sank into the wall behind them. The waiting horse rattled his feet on the asphalt pavement, his awakened driver uttered an exclamation of alarm, and footsteps were heard hurrying away. The newspaper man had sprung to his feet. Senator Jones grasped his guest's arm and whispered, "Don't move." "Some one fired in here," said the journalist. "I will pursue him."

"Do nothing of the kind," said Senator Jones in an agitated whisper. "Make no alarm. That villain could not be caught now, and no one must hear of his attempt lest others should be led to imitate it."

"What do you mean?" asked the other in surprise. "I mean this—That man thought that he was shooting at the Vice President of the United States, who, by reckless newspaper publications, he has been led to believe is indirectly responsible for Garfield's fate. Mr. Arthur must never hear of this, and, above all, the public must never hear of it. I consider that Mr. Arthur's life is in your hands. If you publish this incident other cranks will repeat to-night's attempt. I trust to your honor to keep this event a secret."

Women and writers for the press are generally credited with an inability to preserve a secret, but that dramatic incident has never until now been publicly told. I heard the occurrence narrated by the journalistic participant in Senator Jones's presence, and the latter fully corroborated it, and added these further historical facts: "At that time Mr. Arthur's friends had great difficulty in keeping from him the threatening letters which poured in upon him. He was deeply distressed by the unfortunate position in which he found himself, and we dreaded the result if he discovered that hundreds of letters were addressed to him charging him with Garfield's assassination and threatening him with a like fate. I well remember receiving at that time a confidential letter from Murat Halstead, editor of the Cincinnati Commercial, in which he warned me that he had credible information to the effect that seven men in Boulder county, Col., had solemnly pledged one another to go to Washington and take Arthur's life. I told Mr. Arthur nothing of the matter, but I wrote to Mr. Halstead that I had no fear of the Boulder county desperadoes or any other men who took the trouble to register solemn oaths and all that sort of thing, and that the Vice President's only danger was at the hands of just such cranks as Guiteau, who would not indulge in preface threats and whose presence would only be announced by knife thrust or pistol report. Of that stripe was the man who fired into my window upon that night when he thought Arthur and I were together talking."
